The Love Song of J. Lender Truetown

Steven W. Thomas
College of Saint Benedict/Saint John's University, swthomas@csbsju.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.csbsju.edu/headwaters

Part of the Literature in English, North America Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.csbsju.edu/headwaters/vol27/iss1/5

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@CSB/SJU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Headwaters: The Faculty Journal of the College of Saint Benedict and Saint John's University by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@CSB/SJU. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@csbsju.edu.
Let us, you and I, lay ourselves down on designer sheets spread across our bed like housing market woes tight across the globe.

Though you ran away to Dublin to a once-cozy one bedroom, now feverish and shivering with negative equity from a subprime infection,

As feverish as far-away taxi drivers in New Delhi, holding their bellies complaining of market influx, that sighs and seeps like a colorless gas,

As subprime as the world’s iconic lovers, no longer bubbling in the alleys of Madrid, their hearts as empty as housing units, swooning, from mortgage malaise,

Yet will I dare to disturb your musings on anticipated wakes, to call you back and inflate for us an airy bed, as fresh and new as my American dream.

Steve Thomas is an Assistant Professor of English. He submitted this poem “with apologies to T.S. Eliot.”